1 Introduction

We live in a globalized community where borders between countries no longer exist when it comes to the economy, communication and tourism. In many professional contexts, therefore, excellent command of a first language is no longer enough and effective communication in an international language has become essential. English is world language number one and a good command of this language will enhance your professional chances. During this minor you will develop both your English language skills and your understanding of British and American culture.

There are two courses specifically targeting the development of your productive language skills, namely Speaking Skills and Writing Skills. Both these courses are spread over the duration of the minor to allow you as much time for development as possible. These courses start by improving your confidence, fluency and flexibility. You will practice using the language in conversations and semi-formal writing assignments and progress to formal assignments, which also increase in complexity and sophistication as you learn more. The skills courses will cover a variety of topics within your field of interest, experience, and expertise, but will also challenge you to tackle less familiar, abstract topics and current events. You will receive feedback throughout the courses to identify areas for improvement and guide your development. Whilst actively working on writing and speaking you will also hone your reading and listening skills.

Alongside the language skills courses students also take Grammar and Basics, a course in period one which is aimed at supporting students to become better speakers and writers by teaching them spelling, grammar and pronunciation. It also provides a space to work in a targeted manner on the feedback you received during your speaking and writing classes. By taking a diagnostic test at the beginning of the block students can identify areas that need work and personalize their learning process by attending relevant learning pods. The course is finalized with a summative test which allows students to exhibit their mastery of English grammar.

There are also two culture courses. These are CLIL (Content and Language Integrated Learning) courses where you will improve your English while learning about British and American culture. This also means that you are more prepared to communicate in an international context because you are more familiar with other cultures that you are likely to encounter. In period one students will learn about American history, politics and people. In period two students focus on contemporary British culture by conducting research on a key aspect of British culture. Moreover, this course gives students the opportunity to visit Britain for a week to research their chosen aspect of British culture (please note that this will not be financed by the Hogeschool Utrecht but the students themselves).

For the final 5EC students can choose a course that best suits their ambitions and development. We offer Business English, Short Stories and Cambridge Exam Training (please note that this is a training course for the Cambridge exam. Should you wish to take the official Cambridge exam you will need to pay for this yourself at an external institute). There are limited places available per elective module!

The minor caters for students with a variety of language levels, from B2 to C1. Your level of English is the starting point for the minor. Before you start taking classes your language level is assessed which allows us to allocate students to a group suited to their needs. Moreover, the course assignments have been designed to ensure that everyone who starts the minor will be challenged to improve their English language skills and give students the opportunity to design parts of their own learning process.

Your teachers are native speakers or have spent a longer period of time in an English speaking country. All classes are taught in English and while there are no formal entry requirements, you are assumed to have at least a CEFR B1 level of English (HAVO English).

This minor is interesting to any student who:

- loves English and wants to immerse themselves in the culture and language during their minor;
- needs English for their future studies or work and wants to take this opportunity to improve their language skills;
- wants proof of their English language abilities to include on their CV.

2.1.2 Course Description

The speaking course will start by assessing your current strengths and weaknesses. This will provide you with feedback which will give you a clear idea of the areas in which you can improve. You will learn how to improve the accuracy of your spoken English such as your pronunciation, through a variety of challenging yet fun assignments. In the first period we will focus on your confidence and fluency while improvising in a variety of informal to semi-formal scenarios. As the minor progresses the formality of the scenarios and speaking tasks will increase, pushing you to use more advanced English. We will look at conversation, negotiation, presentation and debating skills. You will learn how to fluently and persuasively describe and justify your opinions about various topics, respond to other's ideas and weigh the advantages and disadvantages of various options.

During the course you will complete a number of formative assignments aimed to provide you with feedback on your progress and guide your future development. At the end of the course, you will participate in a TEDx style conference at which you will present on a controversial topic of contemporary interest and will participate in a formal discussion on that topic afterwards.

2.1.3 Learning Objectives

- Students can identify areas of weakness in their spoken English and formulate a realistic plan of action to improve their spoken English in a 14-week time frame.
- Students can implement their plan to improve the fluency and accuracy of their spoken English, including their pronunciation, grammar and vocabulary.
- Students can introduce themselves and other people fluently and respond to questions about familiar topics spontaneously.
- Students can solve a problem in an informal/semi-formal situation.
- Students can ask questions to obtain information, provide relevant, detailed information, check for understanding and negotiate in English.

- Students can speak informatively and/or persuasively, in a fluent, detailed, structured and engaging manner, about a topic they are familiar with.
- Students can spontaneously answer audience questions about the topic of their presentation with cohesion and clarity.
- Students can hold a formal discussion about a controversial topic in which they adopt an appropriate register for the intended audience and use correct formal vocabulary.
- Students can respond to opposing arguments spontaneously, cohesively and convincingly.
- Students can summarise the main points of an argument clearly and persuasively.
- Students can speak at minimum CEFR B2 level.

2.2.2 Course Description

Whether you are writing something informative, persuasive, creative or entertaining, your writing must communicate a cohesive message to the reader. During this course we will look at how to structure your writing to communicate your message clearly; how to adapt your writing style to suit the genre, format or target audience; how to write descriptively and metaphorically to paint a picture in your reader's mind, but also to develop your vocabulary and flexibility when writing; how to incorporate sources into your writing in order to support your opinion, but also how to analyse the relevance and credibility of a source; finally we will look at how to edit your writing effectively to encourage you to rewrite and improve your language and communication skills.

During the course you will complete a variety of tasks. Some will be peer reviewed and some will receive teacher feedback. At the end of the course, you will present a portfolio of work which shows your ability to write clearly and effectively in a range of formats for a range of purposes and in an engaging manner suited to your target audience.

2.2.3 Learning Objectives

- Students can write a range of structured pieces such as stories, blogs or essays with a beginning/introduction, middle/body and ending/conclusion, of between 250 and 750 words.
- Students can write cohesively on a range of topics for a variety of purposes to communicate a clear message to the reader.
- Students can edit their work based on feedback to improve the accuracy and communicative success of the piece.
- Students can write descriptively and meaningfully about their own experiences and places they have visited to engage the reader in their piece.
- Students are aware of differences between spoken and written English and can adopt an appropriate register for the topic, genre and target audience.
